I originally bought it as a gift but ended up keeping it for myself. It is a fun kit with trivia and a good reference tool. It comes with a "law school in 96 pages" book that includes definitions and explanations of legal terms. It also presents important court cases and documents in a chronological order. This is truly an entertaining must-have!

Boy, do I feel like a great big chump for spending six figures on law school tuition. Someone gave this to me as a graduation present, and it was a crushing blow to realize how much time and money I could have saved. Then again, none of my attorney colleagues have Cardozo and Jefferson trading cards. So who's the chump now?

"Law school in a box" came in the mail today! I was so excited I read all the cards and the book today. Had a good laugh and approved on everything they say. It's a great way to relax! I recommend it! (tomorrow I'll show my colleagues this too, I'm sure we'll have a blast reading it through!)

I am a law student and have found this little box to be a lot of fun. My friends and I enjoy reading the cards to each other, laughing and having a good time with the box, as it has come to be known. Nice break from the usual and I would recommend to anyone looking for a break from studying.

I've seen what's inside, but personally, it didn't really matter -- it's a novelty item and a good gift for any law student. It's a cheap thrill and not a bad idea to send a current student for a quick laugh :o)

What a cute gift to give to someone going off to law school! My coworker and I purchased this for our coworker who was going off to law school and she loved it! We looked through the cards and little book when she opened it and want to buy one for ourselves too. It gives a summary of recent important cases and it makes good talking points socially. I highly recommend...it's witty and a funny!

Each year during the holidays my husband's law firm has their annual holiday party and hosts a gift exchange. One of the requirements of the gift exchange oddly enough is that the item you bring must be under $10. This was perfect! I purchased it on sale and was able to bring two for the party. It was an instant hit with every attorney & spouse at the party. Some of the more hilarious aspects:- The "Diploma" that includes the details of the "prestigious boxed institution".- The "Compare and Save" list that shows the savings compared to Harvard, Duke and Yale.- The "Heroes of the Courtroom" trading cards that show not only a few facts, but make it funny. Just like most products put out by Mental Floss this one is hilarious and factual. It's obviously not a "true" training course, but even soon-to-be lawyers may appreciate a new way of looking at information that has no doubt become boring and overdone. I highly recommend this as a gift and know from personal experience that it would no doubt be a huge hit in a room full of attorneys!

This was perfect for a good laugh for a friend going off to law school. It actually had some good information and made for a great little gift.
