Very helpful in learning to do good legal writing. To me, the most helpful part was being able to compare examples of bad writing to examples of good writing, and see their explanation of what made one writing sample better than another. The instructions on how to do good legal writing are adequate or better, but I know another book that does that part better, called A Lawyer Writes, by Christine Coughlin and also available from . The two books together are better than any single book I have found. This book helps you get the basics, and A Lawyer Writes will then really help you polish your writing. If your teacher or your text book have you hopelessly confused, these two books will allow you to understand the basics and the big picture, as well as most of the details you need to do well, but every teacher and every court system will have a few details that are non-standard - and you absolutely must pay attention to any such special formats or terminology or whatever their detail of choice is. One court I have filed papers in requires three inches or more of blank space at the top of the cover sheet so that they can stamp in that area, for example.

Very helpful

like it!

I don't really like this series of texts
