i got these for my 9 yr old son in 4th grade...they are a little too easy for him, some of his classmates were making fun of him and they called them "baby jokes" Guess they are in the age of trying to be cool and older. But I just told him they are just jealous. I would say these are great for younger minded kids maybe 1st-3rd grade? But my son does enjoy some of them, as I continue to put them in his lunch

These notes are cute, but we definitely prefer the animal version of this book. There are also quite a few references in here to ghosts, vampires, and the like. These are not our family's favorite subjects. I am likely to try another version next time. In general, however, we love the Lunchbox Jokes. There is even a space to add your own note to brighten their day!

My son has had these all year. I put one in his lunch every day. When I forgot to do so he would remind me the next day. He was in first grade and they were appropriately goofy. It was something all the kids around him looked forward to during lunch. The school counselor took an interest and collected them from him.

Last year we bought Lunch Lines for our 1st grader to help her practice reading and have a little surprise at lunch every day. When those ran out we bought these Lunchbox Joke: Food to keep the fun rolling. Many of the jokes require the reader to have a pretty broad understanding of the array of products in your pantry. For example, "How do you fix a broken pizza? With tomato paste." My 7 year-old didn't even know tomato paste was a thing. I had to grab a can from the cupboard and explain it to her. Bottom line, they're not funny. Yes, my kid is still the hit of her lunch table and I get props for the effort. But the Lunch Lines joke (written by a dad for his kid) are more heart-felt, silly and approachable to an elementary school audience.

These guys just knocked off the "Lunch Lines books". I was looking for something with different jokes as we have already done 2 of the lunch lines books. The format is too big and not practical for the target age group. Jokes are nothing special.

Good but I feel like some of the jokes go over the kids' head, I mean they are in elementary school and we expect them to understand complex jokes. I have had to explain most of them to them. A joke shouldn't contain complex instructions like it's algebra math.

These are the best! Great price for cute little jokes. I love folding them up and putting them in my kids' lunches. My kids always come home saying that they read them out loud to their friends and they all had a good laugh.

When our little one started to read, we procured these as a motivational tool during lunches to "read" more. The truth is though, his friends probably had more chuckles than he did initially, as it's more fun to hear jokes than to read them out loud and try to process them; but it did get him to read/pick up a few new words here and there. I read the jokes as I pack them and the jokes are simple and do create some chuckles! They would be too simple for kids older than 8.
